PUBLISHER'S CHAT

We are glad to say to our subscribers, readers and friends that the new year has started well with the CRISIS magazine. The amount of business which we did during the recent holidays in books, calendars and magazines surpassed all previous records. To our friends we say a cordial "Thank you."

We believe that there are many communities as yet untouched by the CRISIS. Doubtless there are thousands of people who never heard of the magazine and the work which it is aiming to do for the benefit of the race, to whom the CRISIS would make a strong appeal, once an acquaintanceship is formed. Will you help us to reach them? We shall be glad to send sample copies of the magazine to any persons who might be thus reached. Drop us a line and the acquaintanceship is formed!

Subscribers should remember that second class matter is not forwarded by the post office department. All changes of address, therefore, should be reported to us promptly and the old as well as the new address should be given. And won't you allow us sufficient time to make such change of address?

Editorial

THE EDITOR, JANUARY 5TH.

THEY brought him down from the operating table at 1:30. It was a serious operation, the second he had undergone in two weeks. At four I saw him sleeping in the ward, ether still hiding from him the sick horror that awakening might mean. "He is unconscious, and we cannot tell yet," said the nurse, "but he seems to have stood the operation pretty well."

So I walked out of the hospital, thinking of all that it would mean for twelve million people if this champion of theirs were not permitted to live. Others would take up the gauge where he threw it down; others might wield brilliant pens; others would speak with something of his quiet eloquence. But never again could these millions find another leader exactly like him.

I said to myself then, and I say it to you now: "What the colored people need most of all is not money, or land, or political power, or patronizing friends, but unpurchasable leaders—leaders who would not sell their souls for the good will of their neighbors or for big buildings, any more than they would for a dollar or a job."

J. E. SPINGARN.

THE CURTAINS OF PAIN

ABOVE the Hill where St. John's Divine Cathedral raises its bald and mighty arch, hang the Curtains of Pain, grey and purplish as they sweep the Hill, but glowing above with rare and tender radiance save where the massive shadow falls athwart—the shadow from the Valley of the Shadow.

There is moaning here and writhing and now and then a cry, and yet less, infinitely less, than one expects. There is silence and deep-pulsing stillness—all that and more. But above all there sits a mighty Brotherhood. We are all initiated into the Secret of Life beneath the flowing grace of the Curtains of Pain. All little distinctions flee; there is no Race; there is no Age; there is but one language. There is a certain softness of speech—we lift up gladly helping hands and offer every kindness of the softened word and touch of sympathy—while through the great window pours the winter's warm sun and the light music of the world comes faintly down in song.

It is a very beautiful place. I am glad I am here.

THE MASTER OF HIS FATE

AT the seventh annual meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, held in New York on January 2, one familiar with the Association since its inception noticed certain tendencies of importance not only to the organization but to the Negro race.

First, all distrust of the whites by the colored people, a familiar phenomenon in the early days, had vanished. It was hard to believe in the stormy scene, seven years and a half before, when Charles Edward Russell, with the genius of a master-president, amid a tempest of denunciatory speeches, had succeeded in keeping parliamentary order. In 1917, there was no suspicion, no questioning of motive. The meeting was filled with a spirit of confidence and of good fellowship.

Secondly, just as one saw that distrust had vanished, so one recognized a solidarity not only between a few colored and white members, but among the thoughtful colored people of the country. Each year that the Association continues with its aggressive work, each year that the CRISIS tells its story not only of the wrongs, but also of the progress of the colored people, the members of the Negro race gain in confidence and in the ability all together to strike a forceful blow. The philosophy of extreme individualism is attractive, many in the nation practice it, but it is utterly ineffective. A case here, taken up at random; a protest there, backed by half a dozen people; this does not leave a scratch on the bulk of race prejudice. But when race prejudice has found itself confronted by an association of hundreds of earnest people, white and black, it has been known to run to cover. The story that came from Boston of the discrimination practiced against a colored woman in a hospital in Melrose, and of the success of the branch of the N. A. A. C. P. in completely reversing the policy of the institution, showed the strength of united effort. And every battle won, whether in Massachusetts or in California, in New York or in New Orleans, strengthens the next effort for fairer conditions for the oppressed.

Thirdly, one felt that not only among the talented tenth, but among the mass of the race there was a growing confidence in the ability, a growing sense of the dignity, of the colored people. The American Negro for many generations was trained to think himself the inferior of his master; such training was likely to breed either servility or its counterpart, impertinence. With freedom there came a wonderful sense of dignity, strengthened by the reconstruction legislation and education. Probably the northern teachers who went South after the war taught nothing of such importance as the lesson of the equality of all men before God. How wonderful many of them were in their passionate insistence on the dignity and the power of the colored race! It was their boys grown to manhood who, when the white South was in the saddle, refused to submit to the Jim Crow car, and walked miles to and from their work. The generation after them was too often taught to accept a crust with gratitude; but today new leaders are again calling for equality between black and white, for opportunity, for self-expression, for the best things in life.

And last, the meeting showed that the economic progress of the Negro had been greatly accelerated in the last two years. Out of this horrible European war has come economic opportunity. The black man's labor is needed and he is getting into factory and workshop. A scarcity of labor has given him a quick boost toward equality, despite the southern administration of the nation's affairs, an administration that stands unequivocally for the inferiority of the Negro. The employer of labor is going up and down the South telling the black man that he is a good fellow and that if he will come up North and work in his factory he shall receive a man's wage. And the Negro goes, and gains in self-respect and in the respect of others; for this country, like every other country, is ruled by the men who fill the pay envelopes, not by the men who are elected by the ballot.

"I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

Henley's song is the song of our National Association. It calls to the soul of every black man and woman to assert its captaincy. Once the master of his fate, there is no task too fine for his genius. Within him is immense reserve power. Will he come into the ranks giving all his strength to this second great battle for freedom, or will he remain behind enslaved?

MARY WHITE OVINGTON.

THE Y. M. C. A.

THE CRISIS has taken such frequent occasion to criticize the white Y. M. C. A. for its unchristian attitude toward Negroes that it is glad to note anything that shows even a beginning of opposite tendencies. In a recent issue we were able to show that the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A. definitely repudiated "The Birth of a Nation" as a Y. M. C. A. entertainment so far as its authority went.

We are also glad to learn by personal correspondence that the West Side Y. M. C. A., in New York City, has so far modified its previous intolerant attitude as to welcome colored people to its public lectures and to treat them with courtesy.

We trust that these beginnings will have influence on the strongholds of heathenism in other parts of this great movement.

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON FUND

GEORGE WASHINGTON, a Negro freedman, died at Otterville, Jersey County, Ill., in 1868. He left to six trustees (who were to be appointed by the Circuit Court of that county) a fund for the education of colored youth resident in Illinois. After the various white trustees had stolen such amounts as they could and spent considerable in litigation the remaining fund amounts today to $23,960 and its average income during the last ten years has been $1,000. Of this income $400 has gone to expenses and $600 to educate students.

The present Board seems to be honest, but not at all anxious to find colored students. Examinations are held from time to time in the county. It is necessary for colored youth in Illinois who wish a college education to see to it that these country gentlemen are prodded up and made to do their duty and that this fund instead of being dissipated in needless expenses becomes a real help to Negro education. Interested persons should write to H. L. Chapman, Jerseyville, Ill.

"FRAUD"

THE January issue of THE CRISIS spoke editorially of the fraudulent work of one Thomas Hopkins. Through the efforts of CRISIS friends and persons who had been defrauded by him, Hopkins was tried and fined by the courts in Chatham and Danville, Virginia. Complaints have come to us from various points in Virginia and North Carolina concerning this man's fraud. We hope that interested persons in towns and cities where this man has carried his fraud will give him treatment similar to that which he received at the hands of interested persons in Chatham and in Danville. That THE CRISIS and its friends should be so misused by a member of the Negro race is a disgrace of the vilest sort.

A. G. DILL.

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

(Lack of space prevents the publication here of the Seventh Annual Report in full. It will be mailed upon request.)

THE annual meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was held in New York City on January 2. The business session was held in the afternoon in the United Charities Building. Sixty members were present, including delegates from the Branches at Boston, Washington, Baltimore, Toledo, Orange, N. J., Montclair, N. J., Newark, N. J., Wilmington, Del., Philadelphia, Gary, Ind., Providence, R. I., and New York.

Dr. J. E. Spingarn, chairman of the Board of Directors, in making his annual report, said that by far the most striking achievement of the N. A. A. C. P. during 1916 has been to inject lynching into the public mind as a national problem. It has been forced upon the national consciousness even in the midst of the world-war, Mexico, and a presidential election.

Among the investigations made have been that of the Cherokee fires by the secretary; the lynching of Jesse Washington at Waco, Texas; the lynching of two women and three men at Gainessville, Fla.; and the lynching of Anthony Crawford at Abbeville, S. C. Accounts of all these investigations have been published in the CRISIS.

Sometime before the Waco lynching occurred, Mr. Phillip G. Peabody, of Boston, had proposed that a fund of $10,000 be devoted to an anti-lynching crusade, and he offered to open the subscription with $1000 if the other $9000 could be raised within a period of two months. Mr. Moorfield Storey, President of the Association, at the same time subscribed the second $1000.

To take advantage of these offers, 50,000 copies of the "Waco Horror" were published and distributed as a campaign document together with an appeal for funds. The branches cooperated with splendid enthusiasm. A total of $11,269.71 was raised at a cost of $1,203.73, thus establishing a fund of a trifle over $10,000 net, cash in bank. It is particularly noteworthy that both races contributed in about equal measure.

In the midst of this campaign the Gainesville lynching occurred. Although the story of this lynching did not receive the publicity that Waco did, two important achievements grew out of it: Ex-Governor Carter, of Hawaii, upon reading the story in the CRISIS, sent in ten dollars and announced that he would continue to send that amount for every lynching which we reported in the same fair manner; and the editors of the New Republic were moved to write the splendid editorial on "The Will to Lynch," which served to call national attention to our campaign. To round up the anti-lynching campaign for 1916, the national office, on December 27, presented a loving cup to Sheriff Eley, of Lima, Ohio, "for devotion to duty, in preventing the lynching of the colored prisoner and resisting the mob at the risk of his life."

The year opened with the wave of segregation still sweeping the country, with St. Louis in the center of the struggle. The St. Louis Branch led the fight against it there. The city decided in favor of segregation. Our field agent who had been assisting the branch in St. Louis immediately left for Dallas, Texas, to organize the opposition to a similar measure; but Dallas followed the lead of St. Louis, Louisville, and Baltimore. The fight was lost so far as it lies within the power of cities to pass such legislation. We base our expectation of winning the fight on Constitutional grounds.

For testing the validity of all these statutes, the Louisville Segregation Case was argued before the United States Supreme Court, Moorfield Storey of Boston and Blakey, Quin & Lewis of Louisville, representing the N. A. A. C. P. The court disagreed and have ordered a reargument before the full bench. We count it a victory and the fight against segregation a distinct achievement.

A trained newspaper man was hired to watch both houses of Congress and to report all hostile legislation immediately to national headquarters and to the president of the District of Columbia Branch. This year's crop included five anti-intermarriage bills and three Jim Crow bills for the District of Columbia, as well as a bill making it unlawful to appoint colored men commissioned or non-commissioned officers in the army or navy, and a resolution calling upon the Attorney General to force the Supreme Court to pass upon the validity of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The Washington Branch secured a public hearing and no one of these measures passed Congress during 1916.

The Association has long felt that our best hope of obtaining decent elementary education for the Negro in the rural South lies in obtaining Federal aid and in seeing that colored children receive their just proportion. It has been deemed wiser to organize a separate body to push this legislation in Congress, as southern support is absolutely necessary; and so we have aided in the formation of a Committee on National Aid to Education, to be formally launched in New York during the month of January.

This year questionnaires were again sent out from national headquarters to Congressional nominees endeavoring to put each candidate on record as to his stand on the Negro problem. The results were published in the CRISIS. A determined attempt was made to inject the issue of lynching into the Presidential campaign, by the circulation of 100,000 circulars graphically portraying the horror.

The awarding of the Spingarn Medal annually calls attention to the achievements and talents of the colored race. In 1916, besides the award of the Spingarn medal to Major Charles Young, a $200 scholarship was granted through the Pittsburgh Branch to one of its members as a reward to the branch for turning in the greatest number of new members.

The appointment of Mr. James Weldon Johnson as Field Secretary and Organizer meets one of the greatest needs of the Association, a field captain to rally the cohorts.

An especially valuable development, because it arose at the suggestion of one of the branches (Cleveland) out of its own needs, was the District Conference. The Great Lakes District held its first meeting on Decoration Day, and since that time all the branches of the Association have been grouped into nine districts as follows: Yankee District, Chesapeake District, Great Lakes District, Ohio Valley District, Prairie District, St. Louis District, District of the Plains, Southern District, Pacific District.

A third guarantee of a stronger organization hereafter is The Bulletin, devoted entirely to Branch news.

During the year five groups have been admitted as locals, two locals have been given charters as branches, and a New York Branch has been formed. New members to the number of 2,253 have been taken in during the year; 30,063 pieces of first class mail, 6,094 packages, and 199,690 pieces of literature have been sent from national headquarters.

Research, Dr. DuBois.

The work of this department has, as usual, been divided into three parts—the publication of THE CRISIS, lectures, and information.

The income of THE CRISIS for the year 1916 has been $28,721.36. The total number of copies sold has been 51,000. The average net paid circulation has been 37,625. In addition to this encouraging situation I have the pleasure to announce that the CRISIS is not only entirely self-supporting, paying every single item of its cost, including the salary of the editor and the salaries of all its employees, rent, light, heat, etc., but also in addition to this the business is entirely out of debt.

The Nominating Committee reported the following names for members of the Board of Directors for the term expiring January, 1920: Miss Jane Addams, Chicago; Dr. C. E. Bentley, Chicago; Rev. Hutchins C. Bishop, New York; Dr. F. N. Cardozo, Baltimore; Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, New York; Mrs. Florence Kelley, New York; Miss Mary White Ovington, Brooklyn; Mr. Charles Edward Russell, Washington; Dr. John G. Underhill, Brooklyn; Miss Irene Lewisohn, New York. The entire ballot was elected.

The Budget Committee reported that its plan was to ask each branch to raise in 1917 just twice as much as it had in 1916, so as to cover the expense of the new organizer and the legal administration of the Association.

The Committee on the Annual Conference reported that the Governor of Ohio had consented to present the Spingarn Medal in Cleveland, the date of the Conference to be fixed later.

The CRISIS Committee reported that it had worked in conjunction with the editor upon those matters that concerned the CRISIS as an organ of the N. A. A. C. P.

The Legal Committee reported that it had concerned itself with a number of legal matters. Besides the segregation cases mentioned in the Chairman's report, the Committee had investigated, given advice, assistance, or directly aided in fighting discrimination and injustices in various forms. Chief among the cases of discrimination was that of Dr. Isabel Vandervall against the Syracuse Hospital for Women and Children, in which the committee secured a substantial offer of settlement.

Mr. Walling gave a brief outline of the work the Anti-Lynching Committee intends to do in its campaign against lynching, as follows:

1. To gather together all possible information concerning lynching.
2. Investigation in the field and publication of results.
3. Bringing cases before the courts whenever opportunity offers.
4. Making an effort to obtain favorable legislation.

The evening session was held in St. Philip's Church through the courtesy of Dr. Hutchins C. Bishop. Mr. Archibald H. Grimké presided. The session was devoted mainly to reports from branches. Mr. James W. Johnson, the new Field Secretary and Organizer, spoke on "Our Aim for 1917." Among other things, Mr. Johnson said, "The main duty before the Negro is to arouse and shake off his apathy to which perhaps fully one-half of his difficulties are due. As a race the Negro is very emotional. When that emotional power, which is now being frittered away, is compressed and directed through a channel, it is going to be one of the greatest powers possessed by the race for achieving its rights in this country."

The following resolution was passed:

IN MEMORIAM

"The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has heard of the death of Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain and of that of Mr. Francis Jackson Garrison with a keen sense of irreparable loss, and it takes this occasion to express its profound and affectionate appreciation of their lives and of the value of their services to the cause of democracy and human brotherhood. They were both apostles of equality without distinction of race or color or sex and carried dauntlessly the banner of their lofty ideals through good report and evil in the midst of a hostile generation. They embodied in their conduct and character all that is precious and imperishable in the new gospel of peace on earth and freedom for all men.

"From us they have passed in the flesh, but within us they remain in their brave and undying love of justice and truth and—God helping us—they shall remain to inspire us ever to give of ourselves as they gave of themselves to the holy cause of liberty, equality and human brotherhood in America and in the world."

At the close of this session nine members of the Board of Directors met and the following officers were elected: Moorfield Storey, National President; Dr. J. E. Spingarn, Chairman of the Board of Directors; Oswald Garrison Villard, Treasurer; Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, Director of Publications and Research; Roy Nash, Secretary; Vice-Presidents: Archibald H. Grimké, Rev. John Haynes Holmes, John E. Milholland, Miss Mary White Ovington, Oswald Garrison Villard, Bishop John Hurst.

THE CALL OF THE PATRIOT

By FENTON JOHNSON

SEATED on the bench under the little arbor in the rear of their home, Mrs. Simpson was reading aloud the eulogy Wendell Phillips paid Toussaint L'Ouverture, the Negro revolutionist. Her little son, Garrison, a Negro child of the mulatto type, with eager eyes and ears was listening to the glowing description of the black man's genius as a military leader and statesman despite his fifty years in bondage.

"O, mother," he cried, clapping his hands with glee, "Is it true? Did he put down the French and the Spanish and the English? Did he do all that the book says he did?"

"Yes, honey," she replied. "He did that, and more too."

"O, how I would like to be another Toussaint." And the mother kissed her child.

From that day the boy became a hero worshipper, devoutly admiring the personality of Toussaint. Louisville, with her burning red brick and her streets dark with people of African descent, became to him a proper place to nurture one who should destroy the shackles of oppression. When he had read the oration for himself he wondered if Louisville and Haiti were not synonyms and if the dead could return and if within his veins flowed the admirable blood of princes as in the case of the Haitian patriot. Many a night he lay in his little white bed and dreamed of a massive black figure, majestic of poise and speech and born to command, and of a vision prophetic. He saw the cruel orgies of the enraged slaves as they swept before them in their wrath their helpless taskmasters. He saw the old man of the mountains with his fiery eyes and his voice, deep with the music of the Orient, turn them aside from a war of revenge to a war of righteousness. He saw the hero of eighty thousand, crowned with the laurel wreath and wearing the toga of government, pining away in a narrow prison cell overlooking Switzerland, crushed by the treachery of the Little Corporal.

Garrison was imaginative. His mother before him was a woman of keen fancy and many said that under different circumstances she might have been a poet. His father, although wearing out his life in the monotony of the barber trade, was of military temperament and hopelessly read the novels of Scott and Dumas with the vain idea that he might appease his longing in the conflict of story-made heroes. "The Life of Toussaint L'Ouverture," by an English author during the days of the abolition movement, was a purchase he had made to find out the exact tactics of the Negro general and he smiled with pleasure when Garrison climbed upon a chair and took it down from the topmost shelf in their little bookcase to devour its contents with youthful ardor.

When the minister, a scholarly man who first took up the work in the West Indies, had dinner with the family about a year after the reading of the oration, Garrison said to him: "Reverend, I've chosen my profession."

"What is it, my little man?" he said, smiling, as he patted his head.

"I'm going to be another Toussaint."

The minister's smile broadened and he replied, "You have chosen well; you have chosen well;" and he hurried forth to regale himself with the fried chicken and the hot bread that Mrs. Simpson had prepared for him.

Garrison had made his declaration. To him in his boyish zeal it was as sacred as the vow of a nun. Thenceforth he studied every means to further his ambition, reading the lives of patriots, black and white. And through his high school days, when the ideals of youth first find expression, he surprised the teachers in the Colored City Academy by declaring his black hero the greatest of all ages and organizing his fellow students into a semi-military organization to be known as the Patriots of L'Ouverture. Loyal to the young dreamer were those dusky followers and many higher aspirations doomed to be crushed in the tragedy of the color line were launched in this organization. It was the panting breath of the young black folk, eager to be men, and the shade of Toussaint was hovering near them.

"Great things shall come forth from this boy," said the minister. "He is destined to be a powerful factor in the redemption of the race. It would be a grave mistake if he should not be given the opportunity of college training."

And so Garrison gave up his chance to enter his father's profession and armed with the diploma granted him by black men, he went up to Chicago, where the University, Minerva-sprung, feeds the minds of the entire world. It was his first taste of life in a great metropolis where the blacks and the whites alike are seeking commercial salvation. He saw State Street, which had lately grown into a theatrical centre for the Negroes of the country, and the hilarity and tawdry pleasure sickened him. And a keen disappointment entered his heart; for the race problem, like the germs of a deadly disease, was being inoculated into the pulsing life of the great city. O, that he had the strength of a L'Ouverture that he might rid the city of this lily-white pest!

The black world in Chicago was too busy with the struggle of living to pay any attention to the silent young man in its midst. Few knew or cared about his career at the University and very little material encouragement came his way from them. Their social life was brilliant, but Garrison was not destined for the ballroom. He called such an existence vapid. He held himself aloof, spending his time among his books and executing various menial tasks to pay the expenses of his education. He was a hermit in a city of two million.

At the University he came and went, forming very few acquaintances. The instructors noted his quiet manner and his excellent scholarship, but were never able to learn his motive. The associate professor in French wondered why he was so eager to master the Gallic tongue, never dreaming that it was that he might read the books of the Abbe, who formed Toussaint's views on slavery. Many a night Garrison would sit with the Abbe's book or some French history of Haiti in his lap, his active mind forming visions of the part he would play in the struggle for Negro liberty and redemption. He became enthusiastic over the philosophy of Rousseau and unconsciously quoted Tolstol and Voltaire. His vision fought shadow fights with all the powers of class distinction from the days of Menes. And he shuddered as he thought of the terrible revolutions that wiped out such oppression and wondered and feared as only a dreamer can.

Elizabeth Selwyn, born of the Southland and the bone and the sinew of the aristocracy, gave more than one passing notice to this slender young Negro. At first she felt the conflict of races, but she soon learned that to be in the same classroom with such as Garrison did not mean social intimacy. There was so much of the barbaric splendor of by-gone days and the warm passionate dreaming of the Southland in this dark soul that she felt in spite of herself and her five generations of prejudice a secret admiration for him. And once or twice she felt tempted to ask him what he intended to do. But commencement day came and neither knew the other save by name. Elizabeth returned to her home in Georgia and to her natural prejudices.

One girl watched Garrison graduate, her eyes dimmed with tears. She was Medora Leigh, the daughter of a prominent colored physician. Medora had learned to love Garrison and Garrison had learned to love her.

But two nights after he had won her consent the young visionary told her of his ambition to emulate Toussaint and added, "Medora, I love you. I could not love one better. You are dearer to me than all I possess; but I feel a greater duty calls me."

"What is it?" the poor girl asked, an uneasy fear entering her heart.

"It is the call of the Southland. My people need me; I must work for them."

"Then let me go with you." That was Medora's simple way of solving a difficult problem.

"No, I cannot. You have never endured the hardships of the South. You, born in Michigan and carefully reared in Chicago, what do you know of separate cars, log cabins, tenant slavery, and the hundreds of other abuses in Dixie?"

And thus the color line broke two hearts.

A few days after commencement, Garrison left for Louisville with his diploma and his memory of Medora. The black world received him with open arms, though several looked at him askance, wondering if he were seeking a position in the Colored City Academy or not. As the summer drew toward its end, the minister secured Garrison a teacher's position in the far South and ere long he was speeding away in the dingy little car, allotted colored passengers, proud of his chance to strive for his race. And as the wheels of the car rattled and rumbled, he thought it was the music of the little band formed by the Patriots of L'Ouverture as his farewell ovation.

It was a lazy land that greeted Garrison. Down in a swamp where the fireflies come in and out, adding a weird brightness to the night, Sinclair College sleeps with the vain idea that she is bettering the condition of the black folk. Sinclair, originally the most narrow of classical schools for Negroes, freighted with tons of Greek and Hebrew and a sprinkling of modern languages and science, forgetting entirely the study of the mother tongue, was now repudiating the old system and bestowing her little energy upon industrialism. The president, a preacher who exploited his race in the name of religion, more narrow in his conception of education and the general good of humanity than Sinclair College herself, greeted the teacher, but regarded him jealously, since he represented a great northern university.

Garrison had not been there long before the president was opposing him in every effort he made to help the students and the community. Many a time he would have given up in despair had it not been for the love and esteem bestowed upon him by all the black people for miles around. The whites began to hate the young teacher, who told his people of the doctrine of equality and the far sweeping effect of the French Revolution and advised them to build themselves up, economically and spiritually, so that they could be ready when the hour came. Their hatred and contempt inspired him and with trenchant boldness he launched The Revolutionist, a Negro sheet of protest, in which he both instructed and destroyed.

"He is a dangerous niggah," the whites said, and they plotted among themselves how to overcome him.

And Hagar brought to them the longed-for opportunity. Hagar was an industrious clothes-girl in the family of one Colonel Blackburn, who owned the entire community,—cotton, Negroes and poor whites. She was black, not comely, poverty and the abuse of ages robbing her of whatever beauty might have been her share; but she possessed the temper of a cowed being which unfortunately Edna Blackburn, the imperious daughter of the Colonel, aroused one Friday evening.

"No; I shan't pay you," said Edna. "The clothes aren't worth it; besides I gave you a gingham apron two weeks ago. What more do you want?"

"Ah wants some money, dat's all," flashed back the enraged Hagar. "Dah's mo' dan me 'pendant on me fo' it; we has tuh eat and sleep laks de rest ob you, an' dat costs money. 'Sides ain't de wohk all right?"

Thus they argued. Presently Hagar insisted upon taking the basket back to her cabin and when she was about to place her hands upon it Edna, as an act of intimidation, wielded a cowhide. Angry to the boiling point, Hagar seized a broom sitting near the kitchen door and in her blind fury struck the white girl on the temples. Edna fell over dead, and Hagar left, little realizing the tragedy she had committed.

On the high road she heard a howling in the rear as of human wolves seeking their prey. Intuition told her that it was a lynching party and that evidently she was the intended victim. Dropping the basket, she ran, directing her course to Sinclair where she could put herself under the protection of Professor Simpson. It was a three mile run and only by miraculous effort did she escape the bloodhounds and throw herself at the feet of the youthful leader who was walking up and down the campus, weary after a customary quarrel with the president.

"Sabe me! Sabe me! 'Fessah, sabe me!" she gasped.

"What is the trouble?" he asked.

"Dey's aftah me! Dey's aftah me! De lynchuhs!" was all the satisfaction the terrified girl could give him.

Realizing the serious situation, Garrison rang the summons bell himself and almost immediately the entire male portion of the student body filed out fully prepared for drill. In a short address, Garrison informed them that the whites were about to cause trouble and probably attack the college itself. Each student had two different styles of charge and according to Garrison's directions was ordered to use the blanks first and not to fire until the enemy shot or attempted to cross the college boundary. So they stood, a solid phalanx, ready to defend their race and their lives; and their leader during the few moments of grace, his heart kindled with the fire of a patriot, thought of Toussaint who some hundred years since had taken his stand thus against Napoleon's invading army. Poor Hagar, quaking with fear, crouched behind a bush, her heart beating tumultuously and excitement only keeping her alive.

Presently the whites advanced upon the school.

"Heigho!" cried the leader; "Where's the nigguh gal, Haguh? We want huh."

Garrison stepped within speaking distance.

"And what has she done?" he asked in a voice rigidly calm.

With oaths, characteristic of poor whites who ape the aristocracy of the South, the leader informed him of the crime, painting Hagar as both an imbecile and the most ferocious criminal of all ages.

"If that is so," replied Garrison, "I shall be pleased to turn her over to the sheriff and his aides with the hope that she will be given a fair trial."

"D—n it!" cried the leader. "We want huh now! We're itching to give huh a nice meal of pitch and tah and flame! She killed a white woman! The d—n hussy!"

"Yes, we want huh. We want huh!" came from a hundred throats. And with a blood-curdling yell they attempted to break in the college gate.

The students immediately fired. The unexpected charge, though harmless, frightened the mob and they fell back. Garrison immediately ordered the more effective bullets.

"Fire!" cried the leader to the whites. "And aim foh the professuh!"

After an hour of heavy fighting the president's surrey drove up, the president having been out for a drive.

"Stop him! Stop him!" cried one of the whites. "He's the nigguh president and probably he knows."

The president, frightened like a coward, shook and trembled and when he could manage to control his voice lapsed into dialect.

"Yessah, yessah, massas! What's de trouble?"

They explained it to him, adding: "We want the gul! We want to give huh huh just desuhts!"

"Sho'! Tak' huh! She oughter be hanged! Yessah, she oughter! Kill a white 'oomans! De hussy! An' 'spects us 'spectable folks tuh help huh 'scape! Ah sho' is 'stonished."

"Then lead us through your campus and let us search."

"Sho'!" his teeth gleaming like a cat's.

So, like Judas of old, the pedagog and man of God led the enemy, ordering his students to cease firing, which they refused to do.

"It's that Simpson," said the leader, "D—n him!"

"Simpson?" asked the president. "Did you say Simpson?"

"Yes," replied the leader, "and if we could get him we'd make short work of him."

"Ah'll show him tuh you gem'mun de right time. He oughter die! He hates you white folks."

Five minutes later, as Garrison was kneeling at a spring to get a drink of water for a wounded student, the president, inspired with his burning hate, pointed him out and one of the whites fired. The insurgent fell fatally wounded. The students, frightened, threw down their arms and ran pell mell, the whites following ready for slaughter.

A young white woman who had been watching the terrible riot from her carriage alighted and made her way to where Garrison was lying in his death agony. Stooping she took his head on her lap and staunched the blood with her delicate lace handkerchief.

"Don't you know me?" she said. "Don't you know me, Mr. Simpson?"

Garrison looked into her face, but could not name the owner.

"Why, we went to school together. Don't you remember? I'm Elizabeth Selwyn, and I'm Georgia-born, too. But despite my Georgia blood, I admire you."

"Why do you admire me? I'm black."

"Yes, you're black—or rather mulatto—but you're a hero as grand as Charlemagne or Napoleon or Washington. This evening you reminded me of a famous black soldier I read about the other day;—I think his name was L'Ouverture. Oh, that I could love you, that no color line divided us!"

"Why?"

"I have always dreamed of loving a super-man, a person superior to all others, but I never thought that such would be found in the race I have been taught to despise. When you go before the God of both races, entreat Him to remove this prejudice that is gnawing the heart of society."

"I shall do all I can for both races." And then closing his eyes, he said, "Look! I see Toussaint. He's coming to meet me! And with him I see Mirabeau and Wilhelm Tell and Watt Tyler and Wallace! And they have a laurel wreath for me! Oh, I die happy!"

And thus he passed away.

THE FREDERICK DOUGLASS HOME

By MRS. MARY B. TALBERT

AT the last biennial meeting of the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs, held in Baltimore, Md., August 6 to 10, 1916, a committee was appointed to look into the advisability of assisting the trustees of the Frederick Douglass Historical Association which has charge of the home of the late Frederick Douglass at Anacostia, D. C. We found that under a special act of Congress this Association was created first, to preserve to posterity the memory of the life and character of the late Frederick Douglass; and second, to collect, collate and preserve a historical record of the inception, progress and culmination of the anti-slavery movement in the United States and to assemble in the homestead of the late Frederick Douglass, commonly called Cedar Hill, in the village of Anacostia, in the District of Columbia, all such suitable exhibits of records or things illustrative or commemorative of the anti-slavery movement and history as may be donated to said Association or acquired by purchase, bequest or other lawful means. After careful consideration of all the facts we conclude that this is the psychological moment for us, as women, to show our true worth and prove that the Negro woman of to-day measures up to those strong and sainted women of our race, like Sojourner Truth, Harriet Tubman, Amanda Smith, Frances Ellen Watkins Harper and others who passed through the fire of slavery and its galling remembrances.

We believe the attainment of the goal depends upon the enlistment of every Negro, man, woman, boy and girl in America. We seriously realize that it will require us to mobilize all the resources of our Association to show that we are not afraid to put ourselves on record as being able to save the home by one day's co-operative effort.

We purpose to enlist the largest possible number of people, especially the boys and girls, in this part of the work of our Association, relying upon race loyalty and pride as the energizing power.

We purpose to employ such methods as will enable us to use every resource within our power for the accomplishment of this task. We believe that the need is concrete and we know that our share toward saving the home is comparatively small; this, however, will give us courage to feel that by all working together it can be accomplished.

MISS I. R. CUMMINGS. MRS. V. C. HALEY. MISS R. J. DUNBAR. MISS H. Q. BROWN

We believe that every boy and girl should become a co-operating member in this program and with that in view we earnestly urge every woman's club to mobilize its boys and girls. The public schools are asked to observe the one hundredth anniversary of Douglass's birth, on Friday afternoon, February 9, by a short program, and each child is asked to contribute one penny on that day toward paying for the renovation of the Douglass home. In our northern and eastern cities where our day school pupils are not separated and in our Sunday schools all over this country, we are asking Sabbath school superintendents to hold a short memorial service on Sunday, February 11, and to ask each child to contribute one penny toward the saving of this home.

The question, no doubt, will be asked by many, "Is it worth while?"

I answer strongly, "YES." For who can measure the far-reaching results of this great work and the inspiration that will be given to the boys and girls of our race? Will it not stir their hearts to greater race pride for them to know that they will have a hand in it and thus directly express their gratitude to the silent memory of the great Douglass? Here is our opportunity. The amount will differ, but the gift will be the same, for the gift is measured by the love behind it and by that alone.

Every man, woman, boy, girl, and each club who takes a share in the redemption of this home enters into a partnership with the trustees in preserving to posterity the home of the greatest man of our race of his time.

To arouse our women to greater activity we have decided that we will place upon parchment the name of every individual or club that contributes the sum of twenty-five dollars; and for the club which sends the greatest amount over twenty-five dollars a special tablet will be placed. This is done that our children in the years to come, when paying their visit to this shrine, may read the names of loyal race men and women who have proven false the accusation so long brought against us that we show no gratitude for benefactors if doing so costs dollars and cents. We need $15,000 for the saving and restoration of the home and grounds. Will you take a share in it? I have deemed it advisable to appoint a special treasurer to look after the funds. Send all monies collected to Mrs. Nettie L. Napier, 120 Fifteenth Avenue North, Nashville, Tenn. Make your contribution on the one hundredth anniversary of this great man's birth, February 12, 1917. For further information address the president of the National Association of Colored Women, Mrs. Mary B. Talbert, 521 Michigan Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Looking Glass

BLACKS AND WHITES IN THE CONGO

MR. GEORGE HARDY, writing in the International Socialist Review, gives us an unattractive picture of the Belgian Congo:

One morning, through the misty atmosphere of the tropics, we find ourselves at the mouth of the Congo River. At the port of Banana we pick up the crew of natives who will work the cargo at the ports of Boma and Matadi on the Congo River.

But here any liberty-loving person finds that, after all, he has not left behind him the barbarities of capitalism. Four-foot clubs are used to drive the natives who are paid the enormous sum of one Belgian franc (twenty cents) a day, for working from 4 a. m. to 10 o'clock at night, with two or three short periods of rest, when they receive their allowance of rice and salt junk which is so rotten that it would be scorned by a hungry dog.

These abuses are perpetrated under the charter of the Compagnie Belge Maritime du Congo, in which King Albert, of Belgium, is said to be interested.

At Boma, the capital of Belgian Congo, about forty miles up the river, the work of unloading begins. Officers armed with clubs are stationed at each hatch on board ship and on shore, and they take an occasional whack at the bare backs of the natives to speed up work or punish the black with the smoldering or contemptuous eyes.

Night arrives and no sleeping quarters are provided for the native workers, who sleep on hard, dirty decks of the ships, which bring back longings for the cosy grass-woven huts to which they are accustomed, as the rotten fare recalls the fresh fruits and nuts that make up their native fare.

The dampness of the tropic nights makes it dangerous for any one to sleep in the open. The air is full of deadly fevers. The heat of the day causes a vapor to arise every night from the snake infested grasses.

After a couple of days of savage slavery which is hidden behind a franc a day wage, the boats leave for Matadi. A few hours' run against the rushing current of the river and we find slavery more glaring and more open, for Matadi is the center of trade, also a railway center, where ivory, palm oil, copra and copal, etc., are brought for shipment to Europe.

The white population sleeps from 11 to 3 o'clock, but there is no respite for the natives, who toil until their bodies look as though they had been dipped in oil, so covered are they with sweat.

The writer saw an officer go down into the hold of the ship and beat a native without mercy because he did not work fast enough in this heat. Another officer stood on the toes of a native worker who had squatted to rest during the rest period, and beat the bare legs of the native to make him draw his foot from beneath the hobnailed boots of the noble (?) white man. Meanwhile the officer twisted the ear of the black man. It was easy for anybody to recognize the superiority of the Caucasian race over the Ethiopian. The attitude of the natives is one of manufactured smiles and European salutations and barely concealed curses.

It is a pleasant little custom of the officers to throw the dregs of their glasses of lime juice into the faces of the Congo boys who serve them. I saw a native injured internally by a sling of sacks weighing nearly a ton. He was allowed to lie dying on the bare deck of a boat. The quartermaster declared he could not endure the groans of the unlucky man and he was removed the next day, a physician expressing surprise that he still lived.

Very naturally it occurs to the stranger to inquire why the natives, who possess land and plenty of fruit and nuts for food, submit to such treatment. You wonder why they labor. One of the answers is the system of taxation which the modern capitalist class has seen fit to lay upon them to force them to work. Without this tax of twelve francs a year the natives would be able to live in ease upon their own land, in their own fresh huts, and live upon the plenty provided by a generous Nature. This tax makes the capitalists independent of foreign workers.

And yet, strange as it may seem to you, my dear civilized reader, some of these natives hate work so much, or work for the Belgian capitalists so very much, in particular, that they refuse to earn and pay their twelve francs annually to the Belgian government.

Such natives are quickly taught the benevolence of that government. They are arrested and placed in gangs with chains around their necks and forced to work for three months for the state. They carry the mail on their heads to the boats; also bear the trunks and luggage of the white parasites to and from the boats and perform municipal labor. You can see them lugging vegetables home for the Europeans, the white person in front and the black offender twelve paces in the rear, and an armed guard trudging behind the loaded slave.

THE DANISH WEST INDIES

THE Danish people have voted by 233,000 to 157,000 to accept the offer of $25,000,000 by the United States for the Danish West Indies. The Independent tells us:

This settles the question since it only remains for Congress to appropriate the money and the islanders to vote for annexation. That they are anxious for it can not be doubted, for they have expressed the desire to come under the American flag, both formally through the local councils and informally in mass meetings. The school children are already singing an annexation song.

But it should be remembered that there are powerful interests in the islands which are doing everything in their power to prejudice the people against the United States. The Hamburg-American Line hoped to make St. Thomas a German commercial port. There are many Danish officials and plantation owners and holders of government monopolies who will be disadvantaged. All of the islanders are naturally anxious to know what are the intentions of the United States and what will be done to relieve the distress into which they have been plunged by the war.

But there is no one to speak for the United States. Only her enemies are heard. Stories of southern lynchings and of northern race prejudice are assiduously circulated. The newspapers publish wild fabrications of "American atrocities" in Santo Domingo. It is asserted that the three Danish islands are to be made a mere appendage of Porto Rico, with which they have nothing in common, not even language. It is feared that they will be put under carpet-bag government and made the victim of a spoils system with "deserving Democrats" as rulers. It is rumored that the free port privileges which they have enjoyed since 1764 are to be taken away.

We know how much this misrepresents the intentions of the United States, but how is an ignorant and untraveled Negro to know it? However absurd and malicious the rumor, there is no one on the spot to deny it in the name of the United States. Fifty years ago when the islanders voted on annexation, the American government sent a commission, composed of an admiral and a clergyman, to talk to them, explain to them the policy of the United States, and answer their questions. As a result the people voted by 1044 to 22 in favor of annexation. They doubtless will vote for it now in spite of the agitation against it, but if we want them to come into the Union with enthusiasm and confidence we should do something now to show them that they are welcome and will be well treated.

The CRISIS would suggest that the new committee be headed by Senator Vardaman, of Mississippi. The vote for annexation might not be as large as formerly but it would be more intelligent.

THE LYNCHING INDUSTRY

THE New York Evening Globe says:

During the past twelvemonth fifty-four persons were made victims of lynch law

Of this number fifty were Negroes, three of them women. In 1915 sixty-seven persons were lynched, of whom thirteen were white men. Of those put to death last year forty-two, or 78 per cent of the total, were charged with offenses other than assault. Georgia again holds the unenviable distinction of recording the greatest number of lynchings within its borders—fourteen, or more than a quarter of the total.

The lynching record for 1916 is encouraging in that it is not as black as that of the previous year. But it is a crying disgrace to a country that pretends to such a high civilization as does the United States. Lynching will never be stamped out until those inclined to resort to it are convinced that for their crime they will be punished. No one was punished for the fifty-four victims done to death last year, if memory serves us right. It was the same in 1915. Every lynching is followed by promises to bring the perpetrators to justice, but the promises are never made good. Until such a time comes when our so-called substantial citizens, who now show a readiness to join in mob violence, are made to have a more wholesome respect for the law we must expect these outrages against civilization.

The Burlington, Vermont, Free Press lays great stress on the influence of the southern press:

A former Turkish ambassador was not wholly without ground for his comparison between the burning of colored men and women at the stake in the South and the Armenian massacres that have so stirred this whole nation as well as the rest of the civilized world. It is not necessary for us to go abroad to find blots upon our modern civilization. The lynching of Negroes and others in different parts of the country is a disgrace to the nation as a whole. Whenever people of the old world raise this question, we must perform hang our heads in shame. . . .

It is the present generation of men and women in the South who are responsible for lynchings. In order to effect a cure of this evil the manhood and the womanhood of the South must be reached.

Under these circumstances, it is reassuring to note the efforts of some of the great newspapers of the South like the Atlanta Constitution taking a bold stand against lynch law, even though the party of the second part be a colored person. The press is the only agency of education for the great mass of the people, outside of the fractional part who come under the influence of the pulpit. The newspapers of the South have a tremendous work to do in this direction not only for their own section but also in behalf of the whole nation.

There is still much comment on the lynching of Anthony Crawford at Abbeville, S. C. From the Abbeville Press and Banner we have the following account of our investigation:

Some excitement was caused about town Monday when a number of marked copies of the Independent were received in which was a write-up of the recent lynching in Abbeville. The article was by Roy Nash, who came here from Broadway as a land-buyer just after the occurrence.

The article is readable, if not entirely accurate as to facts. As is said in the editorials reproduced from the State in this issue, Mr. Nash makes the mistake of assuming that there are two classes of people in this section. There is only one class, though some are richer than others, some have had more advantages than others, and some look at things from a different angle than do others. The people of this section are all one people. He makes the further mistake in assuming that it is always the poorer classes, as he calls them, that take part in lynchings. Sometimes it is and sometimes it is not. Generally speaking, lynching parties are composed of men from both the rich and the poor.

The fatal error into which Mr. Nash falls and the reason his article and others like it written about these occurrences will do no good, is that he undertakes to make the lynching of Crawford wrong, because as he alleges Crawford was a self-respecting and wealthy Negro, and guilty of no wrong.

He thereby raises an issue which should not enter into the discussion of the case. By asserting that Crawford was a hero as he sees him, he allows the other party to justify lynching when he proves that Crawford was not a hero. As a matter of fact lynching never occurs either against Negroes or whites unless they are guilty of some crime or in serious disorder. And this was true in Crawford's case. He was a vicious Negro. He was a tyrant among his own people and he went out of the way to be offensive to those people who were not so wealthy as he was. Of course, there was prejudice, we will not deny that; but Crawford had not been lynched before. And he would not have been lynched when he was if he had not been too eager to curse and abuse a white man and "assert his manhood." No man who treats his neighbors right and keeps the peace is ever lynched.

But this no more excuses lynching than does the fact that a man lynched was a good citizen make it wrong. Lynching is wrong because it is contrary to law. When we get away from the individual lynched and get down to the gist of the offense, we will learn that we can neither justify nor condemn lynching on the standing of the particular victim. And we will make progress when we get away from the by-paths and get in the middle of the road. We must consider the broken law and not the individual involved in an alleged crime, or we had as well quit.

The Charleston News and Courier speaks of the surprise caused by the arrest of nine men charged with the lynching of Anthony Crawford:

The question of the guilt or innocence of the men who are now under charges at Abbeville is not, of course, a subject which can properly be discussed while these charges are pending; but the vigorous promptness with which this case has been handled by the governor, the solicitor and other officers of the law cannot fail to have a salutary effect. The main thing needed to put a stop to lynching is for everybody to know that whenever there is one, effort is going to be made to bring those responsible for it to justice.

The News, Greenville, S. C., complacently tells us:

The probability is that no one will ever be convicted of that lynching. But the governor is discharging his duty; the solicitor is discharging his; the county officials are discharging theirs in making an effort to find out the men who killed the Negro. The law will have been absolved from the charge of apathy when the court machinery is set to work in an effort to convict those who took the law into their own hands.

A word to New Yorkers from the Holyoke, Mass., Telegram:

A crazed man ran amuck in the streets of New York and before a mob got hold of him he had seriously wounded a pedestrian. When the mob got through with him the man was a fit subject for the dangerous ward of a nearby hospital with a broken skull and a body actually covered with bloody bruises. He died in a little while.

It is not long ago we were denouncing Georgia, and have been denouncing other communities because of the conduct of mobs. New York is not in the South nor West. How about the lynchers of this week?

THE HEGIRA

THE southern papers are still full of comment regarding the exodus of Negroes from the South. The following reason is given by the Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser:

The Negro from middle Alabama is going North because of economic conditions which he cannot help and which he cannot overcome. He is not being forced out by pressure from the white race. The relations between the two races in this section were never better; the Negro here is not subjected to oppression or to any outbreaks of violence which have induced the Negro to leave certain other sections of the South.

The Negro is going because he is the most unfortunate of the victims of the combined disaster this year, of the flood and the boll weevil. There has been actual want and hunger among some of the Negroes on the plantations. The heads of Negro families have been without present resources and without future prospects. The wise planter and farmer has said to his Negro employees and tenants:

"You never made anything this year. I never made anything this year. But we will do our best and I will see what resources I can get together to keep you until next year, when we can all make a fresh start."

Another class of farmers, and we suspect that their number is too large, has said: "You never made anything this year. I never made anything this year. I cannot afford to feed you and your family until the beginning of the next crop year. You must go out and shift for yourselves."

This cold-blooded business view of the situation, we suspect, has been the best assistance that the labor agent has received. It is not difficult to know what a Negro farm hand will do when he and his family are facing hunger, when a labor agent offers him a railroad ticket and a promise of two dollars and a half a day in the industrial works of the North and East. That many of these Negro emigrants, from one section to the other, are destined to suffer, and to regret their leaving the South is certain: it is equally certain that a few of the more progressive and determined will do well financially as compared with their previous experience.

The exodus, considered from the standpoint of the white man, will for the time being depress land values, generally speaking. Land will be in less demand than it has been since the war. There simply will not be enough labor to work the land heretofore devoted to farming purposes. Of course, there is to be no revolution of farming conditions; affairs will go on much the same. But land will be worth less and labor will be worth more in the future.

In Georgia they do not feel so sure that nature alone is at fault. The Atlanta Independent says:

Like in the life of the individual, there comes a time in the life of a nation, a people or a section when it must face the truth, and the time is fast approaching when the South must arrive at the truth and confess it with reference to the black folk who are a part of the life, character and thought of our own section. It is as our white neighbor says, a shame that the South has not been awakened by moral suasion for the sake of right and is now being aroused only because it realizes that it is about to lose a dollar. The Constitution remarks that it is unfortunate for the people of Georgia that an appeal to the pocketbook should be necessary to bring back the enthronement of the law; and the Independent adds that while we regret that conscience and the love of humanity could not bring the South to its senses, we are proud to observe the trend of public opinion, even if it is obtained by an appeal to the pocketbook.

The South, in common with our own beloved state, finds itself up against this proposition—that it is about to swap the much-talked-of race problem for a labor problem, and it realizes that while the race problem might have pinched many of their consciences, the labor problem will affect all of their pocketbooks. And the hopeful sign about it is that leading journals like the Atlanta Constitution, the Savannah Morning News, and thousands of weeklies, like the Ocilla Star and Tifton Gazette, are admitting the facts and confessing to the plain truth.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Constitution, admits that mob law is largely responsible for the unrest among the Negroes; that inadequate school facilities and a lack of justice to the Negro in the administration of the law is largely responsible for the unrest and the movement North and East; that it is in the hands of the white man to stop the exodus and the remedy lies in ample protection of life, ample school facilities, proper encouragement and protection of life and liberty to the black folk in common with the white folk. There should be no question why the Negro would leave Georgia or other southern states to hunt for a place where he can educate his children; where he can worship God without having his temple burned down; where he can assemble in his lodge room without being accused of plotting against his neighbors and having the torch stuck to his lodge room; where his women will be safe from the noose of the mob and where he can expect justice when tried in the courts.

Lack of colored public schools is dwelt upon by the Atlanta Constitution:

Georgia, as well as other southern states, is undoubtedly behind in the matter of Negro education; unfair in the matter of facilities, in the quality of teachers and instructors, and in the pay of those expected to impart proper instruction to Negro children.

We have proceeded upon the theory that education would, in his own mind at least, carry the Negro beyond his sphere; that it would give him higher ideas of himself and make of him a poorer and less satisfactory workman. That is nonsense.

If we look over the list of the most outrageous crimes committed by Negroes, we find that they are generally the work of illiterate Negro brutes. Crimes of educated Negroes are fewer and of a minor nature compared to those committed by Negroes in whom the brutal instinct predominates. Education minimizes or removes that instinct, and, morally, the properly educated Negro is the better citizen, just as is the educated white.

The right sort of education makes a better workman, no matter what his sphere. A trained horse, a trained dog, make better animals. A ditch digger who can read and write makes a better ditch digger. An illiterate cook or washerwoman must fall short in service of one who possesses the fundamentals of an education.

There are two very good reasons why it is not only due the Negroes, but it is an important safeguard to the whites themselves, to provide a thorough and efficient educational system for the Negroes.

In the quotation published today from the Fort Valley Uplift, it is declared an acknowledged fact that schools for Negroes, "especially in the country districts where the great masses of the Negroes live, with very rare exception, amount to practically nothing."

This should not be. Education will make a better cotton picker and a more efficient plowman. It would mean both a better type of citizen and a better farm laborer.

It is not only a question of duty to the Negro race, but of duty to the whites, to ourselves, that there should be improvement of a material sort in the system of education provided for them.

Georgia will do herself an important and a lasting service when she supplies it.

From the Newark, N. J., News come the following stirring words:

How futile is force in human relations being shown anew by the efforts of the South to keep the Negroes from emigrating North. By force the colored people were brought here, and Civil War, which ravaged the South even as Belgium has not been ravaged, was the penalty. By force the South would keep them and the immigration movement continues, causing the Southerners to fear a serious shortage of labor in their cotton fields. Possessed of the most abundant supply of labor in the country, their methods of holding and profiting by it are likely to defeat themselves.

A dispatch from Atlanta tells of the cooperation of Negro leaders and white economists to check the emigration. Persuasion is used in part; the Negro is told that no permanent gain awaits him in the North where he will find the colder climate a hardship. But, this failing, resort is made to force. Municipalities have passed ordinances to hamper northern recruiting agents. Prohibitive license fees have been imposed upon them. Old laws are scanned in the effort to keep the Negro for the services of the South. So far only trivial and local success has resulted.

Cannot the South see that there are more than material rewards that draw the colored people North? Is it blind to the effect of its own treatment of the Negro? Does it not understand the desire of enfranchised men for the right to be free men with a voice in the conduct of their own affairs? Can it not appreciate the feeling aroused by the unjustifiable lynchings and other discriminations against the colored people?

That the South has a problem to solve nobody can deny, but force has never yet helped in its solution and there is no chance that it ever will. What does it offer the Negro except a warm climate, a familiar habitat and an indolent life? Has it given him a chance to get ahead? If he gets ahead by his own efforts, does it offer him a man's place in his town or state? Or does it discourage him by holding constantly before his eyes an assertion of his hopeless inferiority?

It is not to be denied that there are scattered manifestations of the spirit of helpfulness that display real progress. The feeling in the South against effective enfranchisement of the Negro race comes back, of course, to the preponderance of colored blood that would control the government. On the other hand, a race is only a menace in so far as it is compelled to act and think like a race and as a unit rather than as independent individuals. With all that has gone before, the possibility for the South of the Negro getting into such a position, or being permitted to get into it, is hopeful only through a slow evolution in which prejudices may die down. That is, if the Negro is to stay there in bulk. But if he is to emigrate and spread himself over the country he may disappear as a race problem. As a minority in different places neither race solidarity nor race prejudice might be a factor in preventing either enfranchisement or development. Of course, if this happened the South might have to look for white emigrants to make up the resulting deficiency in labor supply, but it is at least arguable that by its present attitude the South is both creating a race problem which it dreads, and trying to hold on to it.

To hold the Negro the South must offer as much to his manhood as the North. Added restrictions upon his freedom will not do it.

Financial America believes:

Whether Negroes will be more likely to remain in the South if better educational facilities are provided them is a question apart from the undoubted wisdom of providing these facilities. President Edward T. Ware, of Atlanta University, who is seeking to raise an endowment fund of five hundred thousand dollars for this institution, is reported as saying that if the Negroes are to remain in the South they must be educated.

It is certain that as the idea of the advantages of education grows among the Negroes the tendency will be to leave the South if educational facilities are more nearly adequate and more readily available elsewhere. But it is also to be remembered that as the education of the blacks progresses there will also be an increasing inclination to gain larger advantages of occupation. The South is developing rapidly in the magnitude and range of its industries and there will be great need of labor—a need as acute, if not more so, than now, when the Negro exodus is proving economically serious. But it is not clear whether a higher degree of education among the Negroes will find the latter willing to accept a continuance of the present sharp line drawn in the South between the races in all activities of life. Increase a man's education and, no matter what his color, he will be less content to be held down to a low social and business status and to a sharp definition of relationship with others of the human race.

This is, of course, not an argument against the education of the Negro; it is simply calling attention to a situation which may possibly arise. It is our belief that in education lies the solution of the Negro problem, but the solution of the problem for the South will not likely come through increased contentment to the Negro because of better local educational advantages. It will come for the South rather through an infiltration of foreign labor into that region which will have the effect of making the South more independent of Negro labor and tend, together with the spirit of ambition promoted by education, to distribute the Negro population throughout the country.

We end the story of the Negroes Hegira with a pleasant, if patronizing, picture from the Atlanta Constitution of a good Negro community in the South:

"The Early County fair has accomplished big things for the entire section of the state, but perhaps the very biggest thing it has done was to show the Negroes what great opportunities are theirs right here at their very doors."

This from a news article appearing elsewhere in the Constitution.

It is a story of progress as shown in the industrial prosperity of the worthy, law-abiding Negroes of that section; it is a story of self-help and the co-operation of the white citizens of that county in the movement for the uplift of the Negro population.

The county fair is thrown open to them; what they have done and are doing, educationally and industrially, is given hearty home recognition and more than state-wide advertisement; this, as their due, and for their encouragement in every effort to attain a higher plane of citizenship. There is where their white friends stand by them and lend the helping hand.

These Negroes, with their own schools, on the most practical lines; with their local farmers' conferences; their women's organization to study cooking and canning problems, realize that they must live out their lives in that section; that their homes and best interests are there, and that their prosperity goes hand in hand with good citizenship. They know that these are inseparable.

So they work for the uplift of the community and in that work they are receiving the cordial co-operation of their white neighbors.

This is not only highly creditable to all concerned within the borders of a county, but it is a far-reaching lesson—a text which preaches its own sermon as to the settlement of the "Negro problem" in the South. In short, it does away with problems; for there can be none where such a mutually helpful state of affairs exists.

"The white people of the county are almost as proud of the Negroes' exhibit as are the Negroes themselves."

The sentiment of these Early County Negroes is: "We do not have to go away from home and ask for entrance at alien industrial gates: The land of Promise and of Plenty is here 'at home' among the people who know and understand us best, and here we are content to toil, doing what we can for our own advancement and that of the community whose industrial interests are identical with ours. We do not need to go away from home!"

They try to help themselves and their hands are upheld; their interests protected; they read aright the signs on the road to better citizenship; the fact that they respect themselves commands respect. They are prosperous and happy!

POLITICS

SENATOR PENROSE'S bill to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment, the Pittsburgh Courier, a northern colored paper, fears is a hoax:

United States Senator Boies Penrose introduced in the Senate the other day a bill which, according to his statements, is intended to put into force the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution and to secure to the Negro his full political rights in the southern states.

The bill, if enacted into law, is a good thing. But coming as it does at this time when the Republican party is practically "down and out" sounds like a hoax. We have been without our rights in the South for many years, and we have been urging some relief for as many years, but no Penrose has come to the rescue. We are slow now to believe that the senior senator from Pennsylvania has us so much at heart as he has the rejuvenation of the Republican party. We hope he is actuated by motives which have no color of suspicion, but our past experiences with the South and the United States Senate make us hesitate to believe that Mr. Penrose is championing our cause with any degree of sincerity.

If the senator is teasing his black constituents in Pennsylvania, he need not go to such extremes. He knows that he owes his political beginning to the black voters of Philadelphia. Has he waited all these years to offer them reward? Or can he imagine that by his belated bill he may yet hold them in line to accomplish his designs on future control of Pennsylvania? In either case, he must know he is mistaken. We know as well as does the senator that he may introduce any bill he pleases, but unless he can summons a majority in the Congress, his efforts are futile.

Finally, if the Republican party has at last seen the necessity of giving back to the Negro his political rights, so long withheld, and thinks that this is the session most suited to the accomplishment of such a task, we hope the party all the success in the world. God knows we have been sufficiently loyal to warrant anything the party can do in the way of making the Federal amendments effective. Our fear is that the whole thing is a hoax.

The Newark, N. J., Evening Star says:

With the submission to Congress of the bill to insure legal voting in the South, President Wilson and his newspaper supporters are to be given a notable opportunity for striking proof of the sincerity of their vociferous declarations for the "new freedom" and "equal rights and equal justice for all men." There will, perhaps, be vigorous partisan effort to evade the issue, but it has been raised and it must be faced.

No man in all the nation can shut his eyes to the rank injustice that has been the share of the colored voters of the South since the days of the reconstruction. Every one knows that the southern states have made Negro suffrage a mockery and an empty phrase. And every one must know, before the present "force" bill is disposed of, whether the President's "new freedom" is to apply only where his party may secure votes and whether the "equal justice" for which his newspaper partisans have screamed is to be dealt out only to those who can spend pennies for daily editions.

It is high time that the administration redeem its pledges of sainted devotion to the cause of equal rights and equal opportunity for all men. And if it is to refuse so to redeem them, it is indeed high time that the mask of pretense be stripped from the President and the press which vouches for him.

There isn't any color line in the Constitution of the United States. There was none in the gentle philosophy of Abraham Lincoln. And there can be none in the doctrine of the "new freedom" and equal rights for every man if that doctrine is anything but partisan buncombe and yellow journalistic chatter.

The Times, Glens Falls, New York, tells us:

You can make a campaign in Dakota or Nebraska or in Montana or Kansas, but you cannot make a campaign in the old South, in the Confederate states as they were. One of two things ought to be done. These southern states ought to be deprived of a large number of electoral votes. They have disfranchised the Negro by one process or another; yet the Negro is counted as a voter and a man in the distribution of members of congress and members of the electoral college. The South ought not to have the benefit of the Negro in making up their representation in congress, or else they ought not have power to disfranchise him.

The entire civilized world knows of these conditions and knows that the American people have not had the courage to straighten the matter out by doing justice.

If the South disfranchises the Negro, the South ought to bear the consequence of his loss in representation.

Every injustice which is tolerated and not settled as soon as it is discovered becomes a danger to the republic.

The South, however, is not disturbed and gives us the following account of how easy it would be for the Negro to enter southern politics. The Macon, Ga., Telegraph says:

Every year for election of President the ultra Republican papers get insane over the electoral vote of the South, which goes into the electoral college with 132 votes. . . .

Any Negro who can read the Constitution—not construe—but just read it, can vote. Any one owning forty acres of land whether he can read or not, can vote; any one owning $500 worth of real estate can vote, whether he can read or not, and there is that omnibus clause—any one of good character can vote whether he can read or not.

The trouble in the way is this: the Republican party dropped the Negro, and the Negro lacked leadership and organization. Negroes can have a primary of their own, but they have not organized. The white voters organized under a white primary and this eliminated the Negro. And that same white primary is now our only protection.

So, since the decision of the United States Supreme Court, and the State laws, even constitutional, are so loose and so liberal that almost any Negro can vote, the threat to cut down southern representation on account of the Negro's indifference to politics, is entirely out of order.

NEGRO ACHIEVEMENT

THE December Modern Review, printed at Calcutta, India, has an article on "Fifty Years of Negro-American Achievement." The writer, St. Nihal Singh, compares the progress of the Negro with the progress of the Hindoo, to the advantage of the former:

The rise in the percentage of literacy among the Negro-Americans during the last half century is phenomenal. Before the Civil War most of them were illiterate: perhaps not more than 5 out of 100 could read and write. Now fully 70 per cent. of them are literate.

I wish that Indian illiteracy had been reduced to 30 per cent. during the last 50 years.

A student of comparative progress searches the annals of the world in vain for a parallel to this remarkable rise in the literacy of Negro-Americans. Japan may, at first thought, be considered to provide one. It is true that in the middle of the sixties of the last century the number of Japanese who were literate was small, and that to-day they are nearly all literate. The Nipponese, however, were not, less than 60 years ago, a race of slaves, as the Negro-Americans were. Moreover, the Government of Japan took vigorous measures and provided liberal appropriations to wipe out illiteracy, while scanty and poor provision has been made for the education of the Negro-American. Be it remembered, that the Negro-Americans have been shut out of a large number of schools and colleges, and could, as a rule, obtain instruction only in institutions conducted especially for them. These schools have been far below the required number. Most of them have been inefficiently staffed, white persons, in many cases, not being allowed to teach in them. The majority of them have been kept closed during a large part of the year. Some of them have been situated in unhealthy localities. In these circumstances, the fall in Negro illiteracy is almost a miracle.

SHERIFF ELEY

SHERIFF ELEY of Lima, Ohio, last August, at the risk of his life prevented the lynching of a Negro prisoner in his custody. Although a rope was placed around his neck and he was kicked and beaten into unconsciousness by an infuriated mob of his fellow citizens, he refused to the last to turn over his charge to the blood-hungry men.

Night before last Governor Frank B. Willis presented to Sheriff Eley, on behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, a silver loving cup inscribed "for devotion to duty in defending a colored prisoner from lynching, enduring torture and insult that the majesty of the law might be upheld at Lima, August 30, 1916." The world loves and appreciates a man, as Governor Willis said, who stands squarely with a heart unafraid and his face to the front at times of stress.

Sheriff Eley didn't think what he had done called for any such action. He had done nothing more than his duty. Quite true, but how many men would have done it under similar circumstances? There may be many Eleys wearing sheriff's badges, but this country's black record of lynching has disclosed but few of them. We can, therefore, well afford signally to honor any official who shows himself willing to make any sacrifice rather than be false to his oath of office.

—Evening Globe, New York.

The Springfield Republican adds:

It is pleasant to note that Sheriff Eley was retained by a big majority at the recent election.

WHY?

By G. DOUGLAS JOHNSON

THE verdure sleeps in winter,
Awakes with April rain;
The sun swings low—'tis night,—ascends
And it is morn again.

The world spins on triumphant
Throughout a trackless sky,
And mortal man seeks all in vain
The primal reason—why?

O, whither are we rushing?
And wherefrom were we torn?
We breathe from out the silences—
And breathless—back are borne!

Man through all ages past and now,
Bows to the lone heart-cry,—
It took a God to make us,
And a God to answer, why!

AN EDITOR.

MR. W. E. KING, founder and editor of the Dallas, Texas, Express, was born in Macon, Noxubee County, Miss., June 7, 1866. He was educated at Macon Academy and taught school at various places in Mississippi from 1882 to 1888.

In 1888 Mr. King began his career as a journalist at Helena, Ark., working for the Peoples' Friend. He established Fair Play at Meridian, Miss., in February, 1889, and in 1892 he moved to Texas and established the Dallas Express one year later. In race matters Mr. King stands for all of the manhood rights of the Negro as guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and he has fearlessly championed this belief in the columns of his paper since its establishment.

Mr. King has been a delegate to every Republican State Convention in Texas since 1892. He is a lodge man, being a Mason, Odd Fellow, Knight of Pythias, Knight of Tabor, and United Brother of Friendship. He stands high in the councils of each of these fraternal orders and has assisted in shaping their policies for the good of the race. He is at present State Organizer of the Texas Negro Business League.

Two years ago Mr. King called to his assistance a few of the Negro business and professional men of Dallas, Texas, and organized the Dallas Express Publishing Company, chartering the organization with a paid up capital of $5,000. This company has installed new and modern type-setting machines and presses and has contracted for further equipment. The company is planning to have the best equipped publishing plant owned by Negroes south of Nashville, Tenn. "Then," says Mr. King, "will be realized my dream of many years."

A CATERER.

MR. ELLSWORTH W. PRYOR was born in Washington, D. C., April 3, 1862, the son of Charles and Angeline Pryor. He was educated in the public schools of Washington, D. C., at Howard University and at Oberlin College. After leaving Oberlin he taught for a few years in the public schools of Alexandria, Va. In 1884 he was married to Miss Louise M. Braxton, of Washington, and shortly thereafter with his bride he went to Omaha, Nebraska, where he obtained employment as assistant steward at the Omaha Club. His ability was soon recognized and he was given the stewardship of this club. He held this position for nineteen years. In 1905 he went to the Commercial Club, where he has established an enviable reputation.

Mr. Pryor has had the honor of serving banquets for six Presidents of the United States: Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson, three of whom have personally complimented him for his skill as a caterer.

AN INVENTOR

MR. H. C. WEBB is the inventor of the Webb Palmetto Grubbing Machine. He has a thirty-horsepower engine to pull the machine and plow. It grubs between five and ten acres a day and in the worst of palmettos it does in one day the work that it would take ten men to do in ten days. Mr. Webb has also invented a barrel stave machine and a self-force drill press, but he lost these inventions because he did not have the means to secure patents. They are, however, on the market, patented.

Mr. Webb was born in Columbus County, North Carolina, March 25, 1864. He spent the first sixteen years of his life on a farm. Later he engaged in a blacksmith, sawmill and rice cleaning business for himself at Parish, Fla., and is now located in Bradenton, Fla.

A MINISTER

THE REVEREND JAMES LUTHER PINN was recently installed minister of the First Baptist Church, West Washington, D. C.

Mr. Pinn was born in Washington, D. C., May 12, 1877. He is a graduate of the Washington High School, the Washington Normal School and Howard University. He was ordained to the ministry in Washington, D. C., February 4, 1901.

AN EXAMPLE OF HIGH CITIZENSHIP

WILLIAM JOSHUA ANDREWS was born a slave in Williamsburg County, South Carolina, October 15, 1841. He early moved to Sumter, S. C., where he still resides.

During the Reconstruction Mr. Andrews was a deputy sheriff, a county commissioner, and a member of the State Legislature, sitting as a member of the famous Mackaye House in 1878. As such, he supported legislative measures in the interest of public education and of retrenchment in government. He has been a forceful influence in the church life of his community, organizing a Sunday school in 1867, and serving until now as its superintendent. He has been active, also, in fraternal organizations among his fellows. Embarking in business in 1868, Mr. Andrews has been able, by careful investments and constant attention to details, to acquire valuable property in and about Sumter.

A MUSICIAN

THE marriage of Miss Helen Elise Smith to Mr. R. Nathaniel Dett, the director of Music at Hampton Institute, was solemnized at St. Philip's Church in New York City, December 27, 1916.

Miss Smith was the first Negro to be graduated from the pianoforte department of the Damrosch Institute of Musical Art in New York City. She also did graduate work in the artist's course of the Institute and has demonstrated her ability as a concert performer on numerous occasions. Since her graduation she has rendered efficient and effective service as joint director of the Martin-Smith Music School of New York City.

THE SUBJECT OF OUR COVER

PROFESSOR RICHARD THEODORE GREENER was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1844. He was graduated from Harvard University with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1870. In 1875 he was chosen a member of the General Assembly of South Carolina, whose duty was to revise the school system of the state. He was given the degree of LL.B. by the University of South Carolina in 1876.

Mr. Greener was Dean of the Law Department of Howard University from 1880-1882; Civil Service examiner, New York City, 1885-1890; Secretary of the Grant Memorial Association, 1885-1892; Consul to Bombay and Vladivostok, 1898-1906. Mr. Greener has also attained prominence both as a writer and as a speaker.

RHAPSODY

By EDWIN J. MORGAN

I AM Black.
 Poushkin or Dumas or Toussaint
 L'Ouverture.
 I am Black.
 I have been the path of the Centuries
 And Pharoes and Napoleons have
 Trod me up to glory.
 I am Black.
 Ham or Othello or Crispus Attucks—
 I have been fuel for the Flame of Progress.
 I have reared the everlasting Pyramids
 And have flung Nineveh and Babylon
 Up to God.
 I am Black.
 I have dredged the Nile
 That Civilization might bring Darkness unto me.

I have cut marble and granite
 For Rome and Carthage.
 I have lifted the rocks from
 Culebra and Pedro Miguel
 And have watched the Seas meet.
 I am Black.
 I have been the great Burden-bearer,
 The rungs in the ladder of mine
 Enemy.
 Mine Enemy has bound mine eyes.
 I have borne him to the mountain-top
 And he has gloried in the Sunlight
 That I could not see.
 But now I shall cast off the bandage
 From mine eyes
And I will see the glory
That I have made.
 I am Black.

MUSIC AND ART

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S "Tell, O Tell Me" is noted among the choral numbers conducted by John Hyatt Brewer at the first concert of the season by the Brooklyn Apollo Club, Brooklyn, N. Y.

☐ The first performance in New York of Harry T. Burleigh's Negro spirituals "So Sad," "Father Abraham," and "Didn't My Lord Deliver Daniel?" set for mixed voices, aroused much enthusiasm when sung by the Choral Art Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., at the first concert of the season, December 20, at the Academy of Music in that city. At the close of the group of folk-songs, Conductor Cornell signalled Mr. Burleigh to rise and share the applause. Musical America says: "Mr. Burleigh has realized every possibility in his arrangements and contributed an important item to the literature."

☐ The Nalle Jubilee Singers presented a program of old plantation melodies at Lincoln Congregational Temple during December and also before a large audience at the Quaker Meeting House in Washington, D. C.

☐ At a Christmas Musicale, the choir of Bethesda Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill., gave an extended program of excerpts from "The Messiah," under the direction of Mrs. Martha B. Anderson.

☐ Mr. Clarence Cameron White, violin virtuoso, of Boston, Mass., has completed a successful concert tour of twenty-two engagements. Of his recital at Quincy, Ill., the Quincy Daily Journal says: "Mr. White's positive and strong attack, and his smooth, caressing bowing in passages where that was essential, were the features of his performance. In tone quality he excels many players of more extended reputation."

☐ Miss Lucine Finch recently gave a recital of "Her Mammy's Stories" at Center Church House in Hartford, Conn. At Steinert Hall in Boston, Mass., Mrs. Nelda Hewitt Hall presented songs of the old southern plantations.

☐ Prominent white singers are giving important place on their programs to the works of Dekoven Thompson, a Negro song writer of New York City. Mme. Schumann-Heink will feature "A Heart Disclosed," and Mme.

Belle Story, the sensation of the Hippodrome last season, "Love Comes but Once," and "Mandy, When You Comin' Back?"

☐ Miss Laura Wheeler, a colored woman, is one of twelve prize winners for her painting, "Heirlooms," exhibited at the New York Water Color Club and selected out of five hundred exhibits. It will be made a permanent illustration for the Water Color Club catalog. Miss Wheeler is teaching art in the Cheyney Training School for Teachers.

☐ The Choral Club of Paul Quinn College, which has had the distinction of singing before Baylor University, Waco, Texas, and other similar distinctions, held a Negro folk-lore festival in Waco, December 14, at St. Paul's A. M. E. Church.

☐ The following letter has come to Mr. William Stanley Braithwaite from Copenhagen: "My dear Congenial! Soldier since twenty months, guarding the Danish shore, your poems were often a great consolation for me in the monotony of the military life. I beg you to forgive me my audacity, but I should be very glad, if you would send me your 'Lyrics of life and love,' or any other of your collections of poems, with a dedication. Perhaps I then must send you my own poems (Digle, 1907-1914) as a little promise of my reconnaissance and my admiration. With all the best salutations, Yours truly, Carl Kjersmeier."

☐ A novelty on the program of Olga Samaroff, with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, was Thorwald Otterstrom's "American Negro Suite," based on Negro religious melodies.

☐ At Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, Mass., three Negro musicians, Messrs. Roland Hayes, tenor; William H. Richardson, baritone; William S. Lawrence, accompanist, were among the participants in the musicale for the benefit of the Animal Rescue League.

☐ The silver anniversary of the Amphion Glee Club, in Washington, D. C., was celebrated December 21 with a musical and literary program, reception and cotillion. Mr. J. Henry Lewis has been manager and director of the organization since its beginning.

☐ The Howard High School, Wilmington, Del., presented as a Christmas entertainment, "An Hawaiian Idyll," an operetta in three acts. Mrs. Alice Dunbar-Nelson wrote the words, the arrangement of the musical numbers was made by Miss Etta A. Roache, and the costumes were designed under the direction of Miss Agatha F. Jones, all teachers in the school. An Hawaiian orchestra of native instruments was directed by Dr. Conwell Banton.

¶ Eric D. Brown, a Negro lad, thirteen years old, is a member of The High School Orchestra at Steubenville, Ohio, among twenty-five white members. He is an excellent saxophone player.

¶ Two Negro youths are members of The High School Orchestra of Washington, Pennsylvania; Miss Monzella Walters, fifteen years, who plays the violin and is an accomplished pianist, and Fremont Brandy, sixteen years old, who plays the cornet.

¶ Mr. Nobel M. Johnson, a colored man, is appearing in various moving picture films, including Griffith's "Intolerance."

¶ The Quality Amusement Company, a white organization with stock companies of colored players, has been operating in New York, Washington, and Baltimore. It proposes to add to this circuit a $100,000 theatre in Philadelphia, and houses in Boston, Pittsburgh, Providence, and Norfolk.

INDUSTRY

BECAUSE of the great migration of southern Negroes to northern labor centers, the Federation of Labor has resolved to admit Negroes as members.

¶ Over 300 Negroes leaving the South have come to Peoria, Ill. One hundred and fifty of them have secured employment at the Keystone Structural Iron Works near South Bartonville.

¶ A. Krolik and Company, wholesale dry goods dealers in Detroit, Mich., have opened a factory with all Negro employees. A rest room, club rooms, and welfare departments have been provided for them, says Mr. Israel Cohen, factory superintendent.

¶ The American Commercial Commission, which has been touring France, was given a banquet at St. Etienne. Prominent among the guests was William L. Hunt, United States consul, who was "particularly" welcomed in the speech of the chairman as one who had merited the sympathy of the citizens on account of his amenable qualities. The Prefect of the Department of the Loire also said that Consul Hunt had increased the natural sympathy which the French have for the United States, and mentioned his courtesy and conciliatory spirit.

SHERIFF GRIFFIN

By FRANKLIN O. NICHOLS

THE main street of the little southern town was alive with excited voices; yelling urchins hurled stones at terror-stricken Negroes who slunk away to hide in their shanties. Stern-visaged men gathered in groups, then silently left the town. Some led bloodhounds, others trailed long, black-barreled rifles. All hurried to the creek situated in the middle of the woods, a half-mile distant, where the little half-witted daughter of a "poor white" had been found—violated and strangled to death.

Old Jaspard Allen, the town ragman, had made a short cut through the woods that morning and had suddenly come upon the little girl, stretched on her back, quite naked.

her face nearly black, tongue protruding, eyes bloodshot, with the awful stare of death in them.

Horrified he had rushed through the trees to Sheriff Griffin's house on the other side of the woods.

Pale and nearly exhausted, rag-bag in hand, Jaspard found the sheriff standing on his porch smoking.

He was a tall, raw-boned man; dark complexioned, strong as an ox and greatly respected in the district. Very nearly forty years old, and a widower, he lived alone, employing an old colored woman to do his housework.

The sheriff asked:

"Well, old man, what's the matter now?"

"My God! Sheriff, I have found a little girl dead in the woods. It looks like rape."

The sheriff stiffened up, all the color gone from his face.

"A little girl, you say?"

"Yes, sir, a little girl, stark naked, on her back—dead."

The sheriff gave vent to an oath:

"By God! I'll bet it's Sally Craddock's crazy girl. I saw her mother hunting for her last night. Where did you find her?"

Jaspard pointed out the exact spot and offered to conduct him there.

But the sheriff suddenly became brusque:

"No, I don't need you; but go to the coroner's office and tell him to come out here immediately. He'll find me waiting."

So Jaspard hurried to town, to the coroner's office. To everyone he met he described the crime.

He ended:

"Nothin' but a damn nigger would a'don' it."

That night five hundred white men, women and children howled and danced like five hundred unloosed fiends as tongues of fire leaped and licked and devoured three screaming blacks. "Suspects" tracked to earth by bloodhounds.

As the fire died out little barefooted children prodded the human ashes, then they fought like demons for pieces of the charred bodies.

That same night Sheriff Griffin sat in a heap in his arm chair before a table. He was sobbing with his hands clasped over his forehead.

He remained crying for a long time; then wiped his eyes, lit a lamp, with a red shade, and looked at the clock. It was nearly midnight.

Suddenly he got up, went to a closet, took out a bottle of white liquor and placing the neck in his mouth, drank with a great gulp.

Replacing the bottle, he went back to his table and began to write. After finishing the letter, which he addressed to the governor, he placed a glass weight on top of it.

He thought:

"They'll find it in the morning after it is all over."

Then he pulled out a drawer in the middle of the table, and taking from it a revolver, held it in his hand under the soft light of the lamp. The barrel of the fire-arm glittered and cast reflections which resembled sparks of fire.

He stared at it for some time with an uneasy glance, then slipped it in his coat pocket, blew out the light and went over to an open window. He stood there gazing into the blackness of the night, toward the mass of woods, twenty yards distant, where the little girl had been found, and three human beings burnt alive.

In a few moments he stepped over the sill of the window, which was built low to the ground, and entered the woods. He went direct to the spot on the bank of the creek, the scene of the crimes. And he silently paced up and down over the soft moss with one hand in his pocket tightly grasping his revolver.

Soon it began to rain, gradually increasing to a steady downpour. It drenched the sheriff to the skin; but he did not stop his steady pacing, the place holding him as one fascinated. He could not leave those charred tree-stumps, the gruesome reminders of the day's tragedies. Sometimes, when a gust of wind swept over the tree tops, the rain grew heavier and the almost imperceptible mutter, the ceaseless whisper, gentle and sad, of the rainfall, seemed like a low wail of the tall trees mourning and weeping, perhaps over the souls of those murdered at their feet—the little "poor white" and the three Negroes.

He shuddered as a flock of crows suddenly arose and rushed through the woods uttering horrible and terrifying shrieks.

"Good God!" he exclaimed, "how human they sound—how much like hers."

Gradually a calm came over him, as one feels when resigned to a terrible fate. He went over to one of the blackened tree stumps, and, sitting down, drew out his revolver. He tried to look at the end of the barrel, at that little black hole that spits out death. He thought of the surprise of the townspeople—wondered what they would think of their respected sheriff when his body was found and everything was known.

In a few moments he heard the town clock mournfully toll two and he suddenly arose, as if surprised, then opened his mouth with a frightful grimace, stuck the barrel of the revolver into it and pulled the trigger. Slowly he sunk to the ground, without a groan, where he had brutally violated the little girl, Colene Craddock, and afterwards strangled her to death, in a mad frenzy of fear, when she continued her horrified screams.

Old Jaspard found the body of Sheriff Griffin the next morning when, through morbid curiosity, he stopped at the creek on his way to town.

Two days later they buried the sheriff in the graveyard in back of the country church. The little "poor white" was interred in potter's field.

And soon no one in the district spoke of the tragedies except the old Negresses, bent with age, who hobbled to the charred tree stumps to which their sons had been lashed and burnt up. Each evening at sunset they made their sorrowful journey and knelt in silent prayer while great tears trickled down their wrinkled old faces.

Soon they stopped, one after the other, for the ravenous mob had destroyed their only support.

When the coroner read Sheriff Griffin's confession, addressed to the governor, he destroyed it—tore it into small pieces and threw them into the fire.

He muttered:

"He was too damn good a man to leave this sort of a reputation."

The Outer Pocket

The Negro vote has been thrown away on the Republican Party ever since Lincoln was taken out of office. I consider Grover Cleveland's administration did more justice to the Negro than any President's since then.

Could not the Socialist Party put a plank against lynching and do justice to the Negro in their Platform, thereby securing the entire Negro vote and also the votes of many white brothers like myself? The Negro voters have an immense power and if it was rightly used they would compel the Government of the United States to protect their men, women and children against the possibility of lynching and other outrages. The greatest blot on this Government has been the injustice done to the Negro race. The candidates, both Republican and Democratic, promise everything before election and do nothing for the race afterwards.

Speaking of the Socialists, you say the vote for that party "is at least temporarily thrown away." Has not the Negro vote been thrown away for the last 40 years?

There has to be a commencement to a would-be successful party. It certainly would be a great improvement for the colored voter to follow the suggestion of Miss Inez Milholland.

I have great expectation of the good that will be done by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

GEORGE C. BARTLETT

Tolland, Conn.

The present arrangement of the pages I consider the better. In the old way, the prejudiced white man casually looking over the magazine, came at once upon a list of the wrongs of the Negro race which was something his intolerant mind did not care to have brought to its notice.

In this way, his attention is arrested by forceful writing, which whets his curiosity if nothing else, and he peruses the pages "to see what these fellows do talk about anyway"—and sometimes he develops a real interest. "A Fragment," in the September number, ought to arouse the interest of anyone whose heart is not ossified or whose mental liver is not "hob-nailed."

Some day, some member of your race will write one of "the great American plays" for which they are clamoring and will have the business acumen to get it before the public sub rosa under his white manager's or secretary's manipulation. When successfully launched, he can emerge; they cannot, in sheer self-pride, refuse to accord him openly the praise and hand of fellowship which they have bestowed unknowingly. After that, it will be easy for the rest who follow. More through the Arts I think, than in any other way will the chasm be bridged.

I am taking the opportunity to write to point out to you the necessity of making the N. A. A. C. P. a decidedly universal affair. Had it not been for a fellow passenger—an American traveling from Liberia to America via England—I would not have known such a paper existed.

J. A. VANDERPUYE.

We are up against it here and trying the courts to see if we have any school rights in our County, State or Nation. The City School Board of Checotah, Okla., hired me last summer, or last spring, for this year promising me nine months' work as Principal of the City School for Colored Youth. Now we are informed that we are only to get three months and the whites are getting nine just the same. Call the race's attention to these things for we are in the fight. We have our white friends, but can these be friends?

J. L. UMSTEAD.

Checotah, Okla.

I am enclosing photo of my home. No one of common sense would want to live in this section; but one of the troubles is that many of these people have struggled and worked for years and acquired splendid homes and property; they can't find a buyer and are tied here; they can't just give it to these people.

We have our cash money tied up in real estate and I have tried hard to find a reasonable buyer. Many are like me—they wish with all their heart to leave here; but it requires a great deal to go where I wish to go. Sometimes I feel quite hopeless, still no matter the sacrifices I shall not always live here.

Edenton, N. C.

I like your paper very much, Mr. Editor, because you make it my paper as well. You try to present to a very biased world my longings, my desires, my hopes and ambitions—likewise those of every other Negro. Don't become discouraged by adverse criticism (I know that you won't); just keep on printing the truth about me and the other fellow. Perhaps my blessings may alleviate some of his curses. Anyway, by following the course you have adopted you can't go wrong.

JOHN H. OWENS.

Chicago, Ill.

Being a reader of your magazine for almost two years I have not had anything to say, although at times I have wanted to personally object to a good many things. I could not fully decide it would be the proper thing. Now that the one man has gone from our race, in the person of Dr. Washington, and as one who tries to agree with any one who is for the upbuilding of our race I thought I would try and say a few words; even now I may be wrong. If so you can use your own decision about publishing this and whatever way you decide I will not think any the less of THE CRISIS magazine, for I do enjoy reading every page of it.

Now as I was born in the South and lived in the extreme South, the same as Mr. Washington, I can fully side with his way of managing and doing things, and I have also come in contact with some hard propositions; some I could not digest and in doing so I can also understand the method of THE CRISIS in doing things and in that is the reason I was so long coming to my conclusion. I have also seen the play the "Birth of a Nation" and my idea is that it shows more plainly the low side of the whites as well as the colored, and it was in a day when the Negro had not had time to develop his mind and the Negro of today should be a more cool-headed example of the advantages and opportunities of this enlightened time instead of encouraging the same way of bonding together to fight and kill. To my mind a more sane way would be better. Just here is where I must and we all as a people should give Mr. Washington credit for working on the Q. T. with the white people to get the money and at the same time train hundreds and thousands of Negroes to prepare themselves for the position of social equality; and when the time was at hand to come up independent and demand our rights he would have a nation of well-trained and educated Negroes to help and back him in his undertakings; for out of ten million Negroes only one-third are capable of understanding a good and sane problem, which is not his fault, but the white people's. But what we want is to get prepared for this thing that we are fighting for and when it comes we will be ready to stand up and hold our own, and the Negro has enough to fight the white man's political world.

Three Reasons Why You Should Insure in Standard Life

FIRST, BECAUSE OF PROTECTION—

The prime reason for the existence of a life insurance company is protection. STANDARD LIFE can give you this because it is the only Old Line, Legal Reserve life insurance company in the world owned, operated and controlled by Negroes. Its policyholders are protected by a deposit of $100,000.00 with the State Treasurer of Georgia. They are protected by the very nature of the company in that it is a legal reserve company—the setting aside of a large, definite portion of each premium paid as a legal reserve is required of all companies of this type. They are protected by the fact that all officers are bonded by the National Surety Company of New York. And lastly, the men behind the company as officers, directors, agents and employees are of the finest and ablest type in the Race.

SECOND, BECAUSE OF EMPLOYMENT—

At the present time STANDARD LIFE is giving lucrative employment to over two hundred of our people. It is opening up wonderful new fields of employment to our young men and women. Some one has said that "the greatest problem of the educated Negro is to know what to do with his education after he has gotten it." Teaching and preaching are noble and necessary professions but all of us cannot teach and preach. STANDARD LIFE gives entrance to the field of business to the young Negro who has the brains but not the capital, or who has both but little outlet for either. Some day you or your son or your daughter may want a dignified, well-paying position. At its present rate of growth, it is only a matter of time before STANDARD LIFE will have its five and ten thousand employees.

THIRD, BECAUSE OF INVESTMENT—

During the year of 1915 over One Hundred Billion Dollars were loaned to the people of the United States by the life insurance companies of this country. Legal reserve companies are compelled to invest their reserve in real estate and bonds. If you want to know how much of the above mentioned amount was loaned to colored people by the life insurance companies of this country, try and see how much you can borrow from them on your own real estate. Naturally STANDARD LIFE will invest its reserve in real estate owned by colored people. As the company increases its insurance in force, and as its reserve increases, one can easily see what the growth of this company means to the economic future of the Race. During the past twelve months we have loaned over Fifty Thousand Dollars to our people, which has resulted in saving to the Race property of at least twice this value and in several cases many times more.

Think over these arguments and if they appeal to you see one of our agents or write to us for additional information.

Please send me particulars about insurance.

Preface by Theodore Roosevelt

The dramatic accurate story of one who rose from slave boy to be the recognized leader of his race and to take his place for all time among America's great men.

A trenchant and graphic picture of the man himself as known by those nearest him; of his contributions to education, his position on the rights of the Negro and race prejudice, etc.

The serious matter is relieved by many of the inimitable stories for which Washington was noted. This book furnishes a sequel to "Up from Slavery."

THE NEGRO AND HIS PROBLEMS

New catalogue on request. For twenty years the Neale publications have been famous throughout the civilized world. Among them are books of history, biography, reminiscence, science, essays, politics, travel, fiction, poetry, religion, juvenile, and pure literature. To this great library of literature important works frequently are being added. Our new catalogue will be sent postpaid on request.

The Facts of Reconstruction. By JOHN R. LYNCH. Fourth Thousand. In his "Autobiography of Seventy years," the late Senator George F. Hoar of Massachusetts says: "Perhaps, on the whole, the ablest of the colored men who served with me in Congress was John R. Lynch of Mississippi." Lynch was made temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention of 1884, and presided over that convention during the whole of the first day and a part of the second. He was nominated as temporary chairman by Henry Cabot Lodge, and his nomination was seconded by Theodore Roosevelt and George William Curtis. After his term in Congress, Lynch served as Fourth Auditor of the Treasury. In this his first book, written with extraordinary force and with unusual clarity, he boldly justifies Reconstruction. $1.65 by mail.

Chicago Tribune: "This book is perhaps the most important contribution which has been made by any political writer during recent years to the political literature of the reconstruction era."
Boston Globe: "An interesting contribution to the history of American politics."

Racial Adjustments in the Methodist Episcopal Church. By JOHN H. REED, D.D., K.C. With an introduction by Adna B. Leonard, D.D., LL.D. $1.60 by mail.

Christian Recorder, Philadelphia: "The author is an American Negro who has spent eight years in Liberia under the missionary society of the M. E. Church. The book comes in at this time with more than ordinary interest, for during this year most of the lay colleges and conferences of the M. E. Church will discuss the subject of racial adjustment, especially that relating to Bishops for races and languages. The book is filled with splendid idealism, and presents a fine argument, which in this day of compromises for the present exigencies may not be heeded."

My Ogowe. By ROBERT HEMMILL NASSAU, M.D., S.T.D. For forty-five years a resident of Africa, pioneer and explorer, Dr. Nassau has contributed largely to both science and literature. While in Africa he sent large ethnological collections to the University of Pennsylvania and to Princeton, and was the first to send a carcass of a gorilla to the United States, and he supplied the only perfect gorilla brains to be examined by anatomists up to 1891. He is a member of various scientific bodies, including the Archeological Society of the University of Pennsylvania, the National Geographical Society, the Pennsylvania Society of Scientific Research. Among his published works are "Crowned in Palmland," "Mawedo," "Fetichism in West Africa," "The Path

She Trod," "Where Animals Talk," "In an Elephant Corral, and Other Tales of West African Experiences," and "My Ogowe." One of his more important works is the translation of the Bible into the Benga language of West Equatorial Africa. But by far his greatest achievement in literature, and the culmination of his varied literary activities, is this volume, "My Ogowe," which the publishers hold to be the most important work of the sort yet published. It comprises more than 700 pages of text and 50 full-page illustrations. Large octavo. $3.25 by mail.

The Black Man's Burden. By WILLIAM H. HOLTZCLAW, Principal of the Utica Normal and Industrial Institute for the Training of Colored Young Men and Young Women, Utica, Miss. With an introduction by Booker T. Washington. Illustrated. Third Thousand. $1.60 by mail.

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle: "In both subject and literary treatment Mr. Holtzclaw's book is a monument to his race."

New Orleans Times-Picayune: "It is an interesting study in Negro achievement and should be an inspiration to the young men and the young women of that race."

Boston Herald: "The book will stir the sympathetic emotions of its readers as his story stirred Bostonians when he told it here several years ago. The story of this devoted young man is of intense interest, not only as an account of great accomplishment despite apparently overwhelming obstacles and repeated discouragements, but as giving a close view of the character of the colored people of the far South, their shortcomings, their inherent virtues, and their ambitions."

Troy Record: "Mr. Holtzclaw is one of those splendid Negro leaders upon whom the hope of his race depends."

Redder Blood. By WILLIAM M. ASHBY. The Negro in America has produced but little imaginative work other than poetry. He has told his story by other means, which seemed to him, perhaps, better than fiction. Whether right or wrong in this view, undoubtedly the time is now ripe for Negro prose fiction, by Negroes, to be written in the English language, and not the jargon known as Negro dialect. Mr. Ashby, a Yale man, is a Negro, and "Redder Blood" is a novel of his race, and of the present time. Moreover, it is a story told for the sake of the story, and is not a treatise under disguise. The novel is one of great merit, as a novel, and there are situations in it that reach the acme of legitimate dramatic intensity. $1.00 by mail.

Wm. E. Chancellor, Ph. D., author of "The United States," in ten volumes; formerly lecturer in Johns Hopkins University and in the University of Chicago; formerly Superintendent of Public Schools in the District of Columbia: "The Neale Publishing Company today represents high-water mark in America for its historical works. Upon its list are to be found the best books upon each and every side of the common issues of our public life. Such is the authority of the list considered as an entirety as to lend lustre to each separate title, creating a presumption in its favor."

THE NEGRO AND HIS PROBLEMS

A prominent southern white educator in a letter to the publishers says: "Your policy of absolute fairness with regard to the Negro question, along with your sympathy for the South, make me wish to co-operate with you as far as possible." Says a prominent western colored educator to the publishers: "I am deeply impressed with the justice of your house. I see — often, and he never tires of speaking of your great work in behalf of the Negro in literature."

Negro Culture in West Africa. By GEORGE W. ELLIS, K.C., F.R.G.S.; recently, and for eight years, Secretary of the United States Legation in Liberia; author of "Liberia in the Political Psychology of West Africa," "Islam As a Factor in West African Culture," "Dynamic Factors in the Liberian Situation," and other works. Profusely illustrated. $2.15 by mail.

Pittsburgh Sun: "In this thorough study of Negro social conditions in Africa lies a revelation for those to whom the African Negro has meant only the savage. Here is revealed a social system, a religious tradition, a craftsmanship, and, most astonishing of all, a written language other than primitive. Especially interesting are the maxims and the fables translated from the Vai tongue, with their picturesque simplicity and ingenious wisdom."

Boston Transcript: "In this study Mr. Ellis has given us an excellent and valuable contribution to the history of the Negro race."

DR. ROBERT E. PARK in the Chicago Tribune: "In an introduction which he has written to Mr. Ellis's volume, Prof. Starr, who is an authority on West Africa, describes the Vai as 'a vigorous, energetic, enterprising' people, and he adds that 'no people of the west coast of Africa can better be taken as typical and showing what the African can do, either when left to himself, or affected by outside influences.' This defines the peculiar interest of this volume. It tells us what a minute and isolated Negro people have done with the slight cultural resources that were at their command."

The Negro Races: Vol. II. East and South Africans, with a Full Account of the Slave Trade. By JAMES DOWD. This is the second volume of Professor Dowd's series entitled "The Negro Races," and is devoted to the Negroes of both East and South Africa, with a full account of the slave trade. The first volume of the series, "West Africans," was published several years ago. The third volume, "The Negroes of America," is now in the course of preparation. Professor Dowd, who is at the head of the Department of Sociology and Economics, University of Oklahoma, perhaps is the highest authority on the aspects of the Negro races of which he writes. Of the first volume Professor W. I. Thomas, of the University of Chicago, said: "I am greatly pleased with it. I think you have gone at the matter in an admirable fashion." Said Professor T. F. Jameson, Director, Carnegie Institute: "I can see especially the need of such systematic accounts of the sociology of the African." Professor Paul S. Reinsch, of the University of Wisconsin, wrote: "I have read it with great interest." The price of each volume of the series is $2.50; by mail, $2.65.

Gen. Randolph K. Evans, U. S. A., Commanding the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's Island: "I appreciate the value of your work for American literature in general, and especially what you have done as a military missionary in publishing books, which many other publishers would have rejected, with a view to increasing military comprehension among our people,—an important part of governmental knowledge in regard to which a great majority of our people sit in outer darkness and blissful ignorance."

Race Adjustment: Essays on the Negro in America. By KELLY MILLER, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and Professor of Mathematics, Howard University. Third edition. $2.15 by mail.

Dallas News: "The author is a cultured man, a forceful and most pleasing writer, interesting from the first sentence of the first chapter to the close of the book."

Chicago News: "The book is written with great ability, in English quite free from fault, and its logic is fairly inexorable."

New York Evening Post: "As admirable for its calmness and good temper as for its thoroughness and skill."

Independent: "There is no book which more fully and correctly represents the wishes and demands for equal recognition in civil and political rights than this volume."

Out of the House of Bondage. By KELLY MILLER, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Howard University. $1.65 by mail.

Boston Transcript: "Written in a clear and decisive style, with a comprehensive and convincing command of the subject. He neither denounces nor condemns; he analyzes and constructs possibilities upon the fundamental basis of human nature. No man of his race has so sure a power of pruning the fallacies with passionless intellectual severity from the pernicious arguments of the prejudiced demagogues."

Detroit Times: "Kelly Miller has the soul of an artist and an idealist. We cannot but be carried away with a splendid fervor for our Negro brother after reading Prof. Miller's book. It is as big as all outdoors and aims at a readjustment on the highest principles."

New Orleans Times-Picayune: "Those who are interested in the study of the Negro cannot ignore this volume. With many of its conclusions we can by no means agree, but it points in favor of a revised judgment on certain questions connected with the position or achievements of his race."

Race Orthodoxy in the South. By THOMAS FRANKS BAILEY. For many years Professor Bailey has studied southern social problems, particularly with respect to the relations of the Caucasian and the Negro races. He has held professorships in the University of California, the University of Chicago, and the University of Mississippi, and he now holds a professorship in the University of the South. Although a southerner, now engaged in educational work in the South, he has lived ten years in the North, and he has studied the Negro and his problems of every section of the United States. $2.15 by mail.

Published Quarterly
100 Pages

Edited by CARTER G. WOODSON

THE JOURNAL OF NEGRO HISTORY is the official organ of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, which is now trying not to promote an isolated research into the history of the black race but to show how civilization has been influenced by contact with the people of color. This publication aims to popularize the movement to save and make available the scattered historical materials bearing on the Negro. In it appear scholarly articles and valuable documents giving information generally unknown. It is concerned with facts, not with opinions.

Subscription price, $1.00 per year. Foreign subscriptions, 25 cents extra. Single numbers, 25 cents; 30 cents by mail.

THE GRAMMAR OF ENGLISH.

On the Theory That This is the First.

The most abused language on earth is the English. It has been perverted in spelling, so confounded in grammar, that few even of college graduates know the correct form of words. Yet English has a grammar easier than any other language. The fault is in the books and the manner of teaching. This book is what the title indicates. 234 pages 75c.

A New Book by Dr. Du Bois

THE NEGRO

By W. E. BURGHARDT DU BOIS, author of "Souls of Black Folk," "Quest of the Silver Fleece," "Select Bibliography of the Negro American," etc.

This is the authentic romance of the black man. It is a history of him at once scholarly, earnest and eloquent. He is considered from the earliest times, and the thread of his fascinating story is followed in Africa, America, and wherever else it has appeared. To look at the Negro against the background of his history is to see him in a light fairer than that in which most Americans have seen him.
